WASHINGTON LETTER

[Special Correspondence.] The complaint that in the restoration of the White House the ease with which the people from time immemorial entered the mansion has been seriously interfered with and in some respects entirely denied has led to a partial correction in the plans. One of he changes which were most sorely felt was the denial of access to the east room, which has always been open to the public.

The new arrangements provided an entrance from the east, and only, the president's family and members of the president's household have recently been privileged to enter the mansion through the main north door,

Mrs. Roosevelt has now intervened for the benefit of the public and insisted that there shall be a flight of steps down the terrace at the east of the mansion, so that people who come to the main door need not walk so far around to the other entrance. The change will be made as soon as

Check to Rural Free Delivery. A deficit of $20,000 has been discovered in the appropriation for rural free delivery. Postmaster General Payne has ordered that no more rural routes be established during the remainder of the present fiscal year, and that retrenchment be practiced in the hope that before July 1 the deficit will be recovered. It has been common since the beginning of the service to end the fiscal year with a deficit in the rural free delivery, and congress has annually been called upon to make good the shortage.

The growth of the rural service has been phenomenal. In 1900 the appropriation for the service was $450,000, and 1,276 routes were established. The appropriation for the present fiscal year was $8,020,400, and 15,092 routes are in operation. The appropriation for next year is $12,621,700, and it is be 27,092 routes.

The proposed destruction of the walls about the city of Manila has brought out a protest from a number of patriotic societies in this country, and after considering the matter Secretary Root has given instructions to Governor Taft not to disturb the walls. The removal of only a small portion of the wall at one place where commerce would be benefited was contemplated, but even to this Secretary Root objects. The passport traffic at the department of state is said to eclipse anything ever known before and by the argument of parallelism is supposed to indicate the enormous prosperity of the American people, "Our countrymen," said an experienced officer of the department the other day, "always show when they feel comfortable and confident by going abroad for a tour of travel." Salt as a Fertilizer.

All soils capable of producing crops contain all the soda and chlorine that ordinary plants require, so that salt cannot be considered a true or direct fertilizer. It belongs to the class of substances which benefit the crops by the work they do in the soil rather than by directly supplying plant food. Several years ago we used to hear a great deal as to the favorable results obtained by the use of salt on grass and grain crops. Nowadays we seldom hear of them. One reason for this is that the potash salts-kainit and muriate-now largely used, contain a considerable amount of salt. As they also supply potash, they are more economical than salt. On very rich land, where grain crops frequently "lodge" or fall down, salt often prevents this trouble, giving a shorter and harder stem, delaying the ripening for a time. It was first thought the salt set free certain minerals in the soil, like silica and potash, which thus gave a harder and stiffer straw. To some extent this is probably true, but the chief effect of the salt now appears to be the retarding or choking of the nitrification processes. We know well from observation the tendency of plants when grown in a very rich soil is to make a very rapid and tender growth. When we speak of a rich soil we refer to one containing a large quantity of soluble nitrogen. Salt delays the formation of this soluble form of nitrogen, so that the plant will make a slower but more uniform and solid growth. Salt also retards the formation of starch and thus has a bad influence on the flavor of fruits. For this reason it is likely to make watery potatoes. Some plants, like asparagus, can utilize far more salt than others. Salt attracts and absorbs moisture.-American Agricultur-

A Business Barn.

Three things we want are warmth, sunshine and ventilation. The right temperature is from 50 to 60 degrees. In my stable the temperature does not go below 50 degrees in cold weather. The wall should be built with a space or dead air chamber between the walls. This is made by boarding and papering on both sides of the studding instead of putting the building paper between the boards on the outside of the studding.

I do not build the stable over nine feet high and give each cow about 500 square feet of space. I do not build of cement, as the expense of the cement floor is but little more and it will never wear out. For a foundation I compact the soil, then lay in small stones to the right level, then pour around them this cement and then put the finishing surface, which is made of cement and sand and floated with a board to roughen it, so the bedding will stick to it. Cut short pieces of iron pipe and anchor them in the cement for the studding for the partitions. The cement floor should be kept well bedded. I would plank the horse stalls. -H. C. Cook in American Cultivator.

To Fight the Borers. It is again time to examine every apple tree to see whether the borers are working. In fact, if we would not lose a tree occasionally we must make a good many annual inspections of the trunks near the ground, and if there are any traces of brownish sawdust means going through the orchard with knife and wire. There are two borers, the round headed and flat headed, but their habits in the main are similar, and the eggs of moths are deposited about the 1st of June. It is possibly not a bad preventive method to hill up the trees seven or eight inches during its eggs at the actual juncture of the trunk with the roots, which is a favorite place, whence it is particularly difficult to dig out the borers. Then, a "Young man," said the stern father, little later, the hills can be pulled down.-Guy E. Mitchell.

Corn Wheat. The much talked of corn wheat hybrid is pronounced a new variety of riculture, which states that it might prove of some feeding value to western farmers, but that it could not be made a successful crop east of the Mississippi. The editor was recently shown a small handful sent as a sample from the state of Washington. It resembled wheat, but was shaped like an oat and was perhaps one-half larger than an ordinary oat. The seed is scarce and high, and we have our doubts as to its present value.-Midland Farmer.

Farmers and the Smelters. Farmers around Butte, Mont., have organized to make a fight against the owners of the ore smerters in that vicinity, which, it is claimed, have ruined the agricultural industry in that section. The statement is made by the farmers that no less than five tons of sulphuric acid and half that amount of arsenic are discharged into the air daily and that the crops for a great many miles around are affected.

Roots In Draintiles. A point worth remembering in the draining of land is that if the tiles are laid in the near vicinity of willow trees or hedges the fibrous roots of such trees will seek the tile drain for the moisture it contains and by filling it "Her instructor says that she plays with a mass of roots thus render the would never have dreamed of."-Wash- of the tile, will travel an almost unlim-
